

Motherhood forever alters one's sense of self, forging an unbreakable bond that defies ownership. It's as if a part of you is replaced by a little person, leading to an enduring attachment. Time may pass, but thoughts of your child persist, woven into the fabric of your identity.