

Where do we find the wherewithal to make art? The American Heritage dictionary defines wherewithal as “The necessary means, especially financial means.” There is desperation in the word: an onomatopoeic wail. If savings is the ability to impose on others, then how – amid obligations – do we claim the time, space and energy?