

We carry the genesis of our children's bodies within our bodies from the time of our own birth. When we grow one of those tiny parts of ourselves into a new creature, we are woven into the braided tradition of life-givers and set on a wild trajectory - simultaneously spiraling down into sorrow and up into joy.