

In this work I try to depict that our understanding of our surroundings is limited and we must accept the hybridity of our surroundings and our very mind. Everything around us is constantly shifting and changing, and this applies to identity and culture too. We cannot keep them fixed; it's their nature to be in flux.